Hooray! Baby To Rule the House

No Longer Do Women Fear The Greatest of All Human Blessings.

It is a joy and comfort to know that those much-talked-of pains and other distresses that are said to precede child-bearing may easily be avoided. No woman need fear the slightest discomfort if she will fortify herself with the well-known and time-honored remedy, "Mother's Friend."

This is a most grateful, penetrating, external application that at once softens and makes pliant the abdominal muscles and ligaments. They naturally expand without the slightest strain, and thus not only banish all tendency to nervous, twitching spells, but there is an entire freedom from nausea, discomfort, sleeplessness and dread that so often leave their impress upon the babe.

The occasion is therefore one of unbounded, joyful anticipation, and too much stress can not be laid upon the remarkable influence which a mother's happy, pre-natal disposition has upon the health and fortunes of the generation to come.

Mother's Friend is recommended only for the relief and comfort of expectant mothers, thousands of whom have used and recommended it. You will find it on sale at all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle. Write to-day to the Bradfield Regulator Co., 130 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for a most instructive book on this greatest of all subjects, motherhood.

A PERSON OF SOME IMPORTANCE

By

LLOYD OSBOURNE

Copyright, 1911, by the Bobbs-Merrill Company

"You are proclaiming yourself a pirate and outside the law of nations. You cannot frighten me, sir. You are a naval officer, and know as well as I do the enormity of such threats, and that it will break you, admiral or not, if you should dare to lay a finger on me."

"That is beside the point," exploded the admiral, reddening furiously. "Come here, and show us that island where it is."

Matt stood immovable. "I can't," he declared. "I don't know what you mean. Island? What island?"

His affectation of ignorance exasperated the five officers, and a file of seamen marched in and saluted with the excessive humility peculiar to German ships-of-war. At a guttural command they closed about Matt, and one, a strapping fellow with a scar across his cheek, suddenly caught him round the waist.

To resist was the act of a madman, but Matt's brain was whirling, and his pent-up rage burst all bounds. With a wrestler's trick he bent down, carrying his antagonist over his head, and crashing him to the deck like a sack of oats. In an instant he was hitting out with his fists, indiscriminately, crazily, a jaw here, a surly eye there, smash, smash, smash, with blood streaming, blows and yells in return, and a rush that sent him under, burying him in a human avalanche. Had it not been for the officers his life would have been crushed out of him, but they darted into the thick of the melee, restoring order like so many policemen at a street fight.

Suddenly in the midst of the hubbub a hush fell; officers and men might have been struck by lightning, so instantaneous was the change, the silence, the awe expressed on every face. Matt, getting up and following their gaze, perceived an old man, gaunt and very pale, standing in the doorway, regarding the scene with a peculiar fixity. He was in a blue dressing gown and looked ill and broken, as though just risen from a sick bed; but his eyes belied his bodily weakness, gleaming like coals beneath his straggling white brows. Matt had a curious shock of recognition. Where had he seen that benign old face, so hazily familiar, like that of some half forgotten friend of his childhood?

The old man's voice was sharp and tremulously impassioned as he advanced slowly into the ward room and addressed the officers. Reproof, indignation and anger were written on every feature. He moved over to Matt and put one arm protectively about him.

"Disgraceful," he said in singularly pure English, though with the accent of a foreigner, turning from the cringing officers. "They would have it that I was too ill to be disturbed and have shamed me by their treatment of you. Will you spare me a few minutes' conversation in my cabin? Time is precious, and I feel sure we can come to an agreement more quickly than the gentlemen here anticipate."

Matt acceded willingly, though wondering and mystified. Beyond, at the far end of the passageway and apparently in the extreme stern of the ship, a small group of servants in livery were gathered, who were similarly stricken to statues at the sight of the pair. Walking unsteadily, more from weakness than the movement of the ship, Matt and his venerable companion supported each other, and at length reached what appeared to be the state cabin.

It was the largest Matt had ever seen afloat, taking in the whole beam of the ship, and was furnished with a luxury undreamed of at sea. Beautiful antique furniture, glowing oriental rugs, rich dark hangings of faded crimson, slashed with gold—it was like stepping into a medieval palace or the famed splendors of the Yildiz kiosk.

"You must excuse me if I return to bed," said the old man, whose increasing weariness was becoming painfully apparent. "Sit there and tell me why you are so stubborn in refusing what we ask."

"Put yourself in my place," Matt replied. "Would you betray the best friend you ever had?"

"Betray?" exclaimed the old man. "Ah, that has been at the root of all our troubles, of all our intolerable delays and vexations. You think, then, our intentions are not for the good of this person to whom you are so loyal? You do not know who I am?"

"No."

"Well, I suppose the poor fools must be commended for that. Mr. Broughton, my house has trusted you once, and now the head of it will trust you again, knowing that my confidence will be sacred."

Matt nodded.

At this the old man bent forward and breathed the name of that empowering whose dominions embrace a dozen countries and comprise the fifth of Europe. Here, for obvious reasons, it must be omitted, though in that great cabin it was uttered aloud and quavered on the lips of the emperor-king himself.

Matt repeated it with amazement as a hundred pictures of the man before him recurred to his mind—pictures in magazines and newspapers, in geography books and school histories. He rose respectfully and bowed. "Your majesty," he exclaimed.

"Be seated," commanded the benignant voice. "Yes; I am that personage, who, whatever his faults, deserves the consideration—the compassion of mankind. Now, is it clearer to you who it is I seek?"

"No," returned Matt, with an ill suppressed agitation. "No, your majesty. I will tell you," said the emperor-king, hardly less moved, his trembling hands plucking and clutching at the coverlet. "The friend you served with such devotion is—my son!"
